

JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE?

FIREARMS IN SELF-DEFENSE CASES

NACDL's newest program, "Justifiable Homicide? Firearms in Self-Defense Cases," carefully explains the nuances of today's self-defense laws to build compelling defenses that challenge the prosecution's narrative and demonstrate the defendant acted in response to imminent danger, not out of malice or criminal intent. You'll uncover how to effectively argue the reasonableness of the defendant's perception of threat, the proportionality of the response, and the absence of alternatives to use force. Lawyers who are knowledgeable about these issues are more likely to recognize and capitalize on opportunities that others might miss, such as when a seemingly ambiguous situation actually supports a self-defense claim.
