I don't want to bother you as I wait to hopefully learn more about this tease. I do think you deserve to be left to catch your breath but we're at too important a time in the story and the country's history for me to leave you alone. I have to try and throw everything I can against the wall. Questions of your unwillingness to give the president your loyalty are already out there. You don't even need to talk to me. Just give Richman green light to tell me about dinner. That's all..

Comey told close associates that he had a disturbing conversation with Trump in February 14. Following a Terrorism threat briefing by leaders of the intel community, Trump excused all those present, including the VP and Sessions, asking only Comey to remain. When the two were alone in the Oval Office, facing each other across the Resolute desk, Trump said he wanted to talk about Mike Flynn. He began with a long condemnation of leaks, but then turned to Flynn, telling Comey, "I hope you can see your way clear to letting this go, to letting Flynn go. He is a good guy. I hope you can let this go." Comey replied only by saying, "I agree he is a good guy."

Comey immediately created a memorandum memorializing the conversation, as he did with all his conversations with Trump and shared it with his senior staff. They discussed what to do about what could be an effort to obstruct the investigation and decided that because the conversation was one on one, it could not be corroborated. They agreed the best course was to ensure that none of those working the case knew of it so they could not be influenced by it.

But in recent days, after Trump himself raised the prospect that he might have taped Comey, the possibility of corroborating the President's words about Flynn has changed.
