Argument 1

I. Ms. Chattah is not properly serving as U.S. Attorney. 2

 A. The administration cannot designate an acting officer simply by backfilling the first assistant role..... 2

 1. The government fails to adequately respond to the defense’s arguments. 2

 2. The government’s textual analysis is unsound. 5

 3. Legislative history and purpose support the defense. 8

 B. An interim U.S. Attorney cannot serve for more than 120 days, even if the individual switches to an acting role..... 10

 C. The FVRA precludes the administration from assigning a de facto acting officer through a general delegation..... 14

 D. The government’s reading violates the Appointments Clause..... 17

II. The Court should dismiss the indictment; the judges of the district may select an interim U.S. Attorney..... 20

1 government fails to address the defense’s primary arguments on these remedial 2 issues. The Court should grant the motion and provide an appropriate remedy.

3 I. Ms. Chattah is not properly serving as U.S. Attorney.

4 A. The administration cannot designate an acting officer 5 simply by backfilling the first assistant role.

6 When a qualifying vacancy occurs, the first assistant “shall perform the 7 functions and duties of the office temporarily in an acting capacity.” 5 U.S.C.
8 § 3345(a)(1). This provision applies to the person who was serving as first assistant 9 when the vacancy occurred; the administration cannot backfill the first assistant 10 role. The government’s counterarguments are unpersuasive.

11 1. The government fails to adequately respond to the 12 defense’s arguments.

13 The motion (at 16–17) provides ample reason why the government’s backfill 14 theory is wrong: Section 3345(a)(1) applies only to an already-in-place first 15 assistant. The government does not successfully address the defense’s position.

16 As the motion explains (at 16), the relevant case law supports the defense.
17 See United States v. Giraud, __ F. Supp. 3d __, 2025 WL 2416737, at *14–*19 18 (D.N.J. Aug. 21, 2025); see also id. at *14 n.155 (collecting cases); SW General, Inc.
19 v. NLRB, 796 F.3d 67, 76 (D.C. Cir. 2015); L.M.-M. v. Cuccinelli, 442 F. Supp. 3d 1, 20 27–28 (D.D.C. 2020). The government has no answer to these authorities.

21 L.M.-M. is instructive, but the government does not even mention it. There, 22 the principal office was vacant, and there was an existing individual in the first 23 assistant role who was serving as acting officer. The administration wanted someone else in the acting role. So it created a new position in the agency,

1 designated that position the new first assistant, hired someone from outside the 2 agency to fill the new position, and purported to have that person serve as the 3 acting officer; the position would then disappear upon confirmation of a permanent 4 officer. The court rejected the maneuver. A first assistant must be subordinate to a 5 principal; an individual “does not qualify as a ‘first assistant’ [if] he was assigned 6 the role of principal on day-one and, by design, he never has served and never will 7 serve in a subordinate capacity to any other official at [the agency].” 442 F. Supp.
8 3d at 26 (cleaned up). “[L]abels—without any substance—cannot satisfy the 9 FVRA’s default rule.” Id.

10 A similar analysis applies here. Ms. Chattah cannot “qualify as a ‘first 11 assistant” because she “was assigned the role of principal on day-one”— 12 immediately upon her designation as first assistant—and it appears the 13 administration does not intend for her to ever “serve in a subordinate capacity to 14 any other official at” the U.S. Attorney’s Office. L.M.-M., 442 F. Supp. 3d at 26 15 (cleaned up). “[L]abels—without any substance—cannot satisfy the FVRA’s default 16 rule.” Id. The government attempts to rely on mere labels here while providing no 17 response to this case.

18 In addition to case law, the statutory structure supports the defense. As the 19 motion explains (at 10), Section 3345(a)(1) “fills the [vacancy] automatically.”
20 Hooks v. Kitsap Tenant Support Services, Inc., 816 F.3d 550, 557 (9th Cir. 2016).
21 The President does not designate a specific individual to serve as acting officer 22 under subsection (a)(1); rather, the provision triggers when the vacancy occurs. By 23 contrast, subsections (a)(2) and (a)(3) allow “the President (and only the President)”

1 to override subsection (a)(1) and direct another qualified individual post-vacancy to 2 serve as acting officer. Because subsection (a)(1) is an automatic default rule—3 unlike subsections (a)(2) and (a)(3), which authorize discretionary post-vacancy 4 designations—subsection (a)(1) is not “meant to trigger at any time other than the 5 moment that the vacancy occurs.” Giraud, 2025 WL 2416737, at *14. The 6 government fails to address the Giraud decision’s analysis on this issue—the first of 7 many times the government will simply ignore this well-reasoned decision.

8 Surplusage concerns underscore the defense’s interpretation. As the motion 9 explains, Sections 3345(a)(2) and 3345(a)(3) provide limited categories of 10 individuals, other than the already-in-place first assistant, who can serve in an 11 acting role. But if the administration can simply backfill the first assistant role, the 12 administration can select anyone it wants to be the acting officer, so the President 13 would hardly ever need to resort to subsections (a)(2) or (a)(3).

14 The government brushes aside the surplusage problem because some first 15 assistants themselves require Senate confirmation; in those cases, it would be 16 harder to backfill the first assistant role. Response at 10.² But to demonstrate a 17 surplusage concern, a litigant need not prove the provision “would lie dormant in”

18 19 ² The surplusage problem may still exist under this category. If the primary 20 office’s first assistant role itself requires Senate confirmation, there will generally 21 be a designated first assistant (call it an “under-assistant”) to the first assistant 22 role. See 28 C.F.R. § 0.137(b) (“Every office within the Department to which 23 appointment is required to be made by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate . . . shall have a First Assistant within the meaning of the Federal Vacancies Reform Act.”). Under the government’s theory, it appears the administration could backfill a non-Senate-confirmed under-assistant role; that person would then be automatically elevated to the acting first assistant role; and that person might then be further elevated to the primary acting officer role.

1 100 percent of situations—just in “all but the most unlikely situations.” TRW Inc. v.
2 Andrews, 534 U.S. 19, 31 (2001). The government’s non-surplusage theory 3 presumes the primary office and the first assistant role both require Senate 4 confirmation, and the administration seeks to backfill the first assistant role. “The 5 coincidence of those two circumstances will undoubtedly be ‘unusual,’ and therefore 6 the Government’s argument does little to assuage [the] concerns about surplusage.” 7 Giraud, 2025 WL 2416737, at *16 (quoting TRW, 534 U.S. at 29).³ “Moreover, had 8 Congress wished to cabin subsections (a)(2) and (a)(3) to PAS first assistants, it 9 could have said so using much clearer terms.” Id. “Instead, it made these two 10 provisions exceptions to a subsection that applies to each and every first assistant.” 11 Id. For the second time, the government fails to address Giraud.

12 2. The government’s textual analysis is unsound.

13 The government attempts to support its backfill theory with four arguments.
14 None is convincing.

15 First, the government observes that Section 3345(a) and (a)(1) are phrased in 16 the present tense; the first assistant “shall” become acting officer if the primary 17 officer “dies, resigns, or is otherwise unable to perform.” In the government’s view, 18 the defense’s argument “ignores the present-tense phrasing of the statute and the 19 continuing nature of the vacancy.” Response at 8. But Congress’s choice of verbiage

22 ³ Cf. L.M.-M., 442 F. Supp. 3d at 29 (“It is not an answer to say . . . that 23 paragraphs (a)(2) and (a)(3) have meaning at least as applied to first assistant positions created by statute Simply put, overreaching in filling vacancies for positions that have statutorily designated first assistants was not the primary problem that Congress had in mind.”).

1 supports the defense, not the government. As explained above, under Section 2 3345(a)(1), the first assistant “shall” fill the acting position when the vacancy 3 occurs; under subsections (a)(2) and (a)(3), the President “may” make a post-vacancy 4 direction. All three events happen presently: the vacancy occurs, the first assistant 5 is elevated, and the President secures discretionary authority under subsections 6 (a)(2) and (a)(3). Subsection (a)(1) therefore applies when the vacancy occurs, not 7 later. See Guidiville Band of Pomo Indians v. NGV Gaming, Ltd., 531 F.3d 767, 775
8 (9th Cir. 2008) (explaining a statute’s “use of the present tense in defining ‘Indian 9 lands’ unambiguously [requires] . . . the real estate must already be held by the 10 United States”). “Had Congress intended [the statute] also extend to” backfilled 11 first assistants, “it would have been the simplest of matters to word the statute 12 differently,” for example by specifying the President may direct someone post-13 vacancy to serve as first assistant and in turn as acting officer. Id.

14 Second, the government notes that Section 3345(a)(1) refers to “the first 15 assistant to the office of such officer,” as opposed to “the first assistant to the 16 officer.” According to the government, this distinction—office vs. officer—supports 17 its interpretation. Response at 8. “That argument fails textually.” Giraud, 2025 18 WL 2416737, at *16. “The phrase ‘office of such officer’ can just as easily be read as 19 a definition for ‘first assistant,’” i.e., “a term of art” as opposed to “the person on 20 which the outgoing officer relied most heavily,” id., or someone serving in an 21
23

1 administrative assistant role.⁴ Even if the phrase “refer[s] to the vacant office,” not 2 the outgoing officer, the result is the same, “because the office must become vacant 3 for at least a moment before the first assistant begins performing its functions and 4 duties.” Id. For the third time, the government fails to address Giraud.

5 Third, the government relies on Sections 3345(a)(3)(A) and (b)(1)(A). Under 6 subsection (a)(3)(A), the president may override the default rule and select a senior 7 career employee of the agency to serve as the acting official, but the employee must 8 have worked at the agency at least 90 days during the year preceding the vacancy.
9 Under subsection (b)(1)(A), if the President nominates a person to the office, the 10 person cannot be the acting officer unless the person was the first assistant for at 11 least 90 days during the year preceding the vacancy. According to the government, 12 those are “backward-looking eligibility requirement[s],” and subsection (a)(1) lacks 13 such a requirement. Response at 9. True enough, unlike subsections (a)(3)(A) and 14 (b)(1)(A), there is no 90-day requirement under subsection (a)(1)—an already-in-15 place first assistant becomes the acting officer even if the first assistant held that 16 role for less than 90 days before the vacancy. But while subsection (a)(1) lacks a 17 90-day “backward-looking eligibility requirement,” Response at 9, that does not 18 contradict the statute’s present-tense eligibility requirement: the individual must be 19 the first assistant, presently, when the vacancy occurs.

law”); 144 Cong. Rec. S12822 (daily ed. Oct. 21, 1998) (statement of Sen. Thompson) (“[T]he change in wording is not intended to alter case law on the meaning of the term ‘first assistant’”).

1 Fourth, the government relies on an Office of Legal Counsel opinion.
2 Response at 9. But OLC “has answered” the question “differently at different 3 times.” L.M.-M., 442 F. Supp. 3d at 24; compare 23 Op. O.L.C. 60, *4 (1999)
4 (supporting the defense’s interpretation), with 25 Op. O.L.C. 177, *3–*4 (2001)
5 (supporting the government’s interpretation). The government also relies on a 6 letter from the Government Accountability Office. Response at 10. GAO has 7 likewise answered the question differently at different times. Compare Letter from 8 Carlotta C. Joyner, Dir., Strategic Issues, GAO, to Fred Thompson, Chairman, U.S.
9 Senate Comm. on Governmental Affairs, at 2 (Feb. 23, 2001)⁵ (“Eligibility can be 10 based on . . . service as a first assistant to the former holder of the position.”), with 11 Letter from Victor S. Rezendes, Dir., Strategic Issues, GAO, to U.S. Senators 12 Joseph I. Lieberman and Dan Burton, at 2 (Dec. 7, 2001)⁶ (finding the government’s 13 interpretation “reasonable”). These opinions have meager persuasive value. See 14 Hooks, 816 F.3d at 564 (rejecting arguments based on GAO and OLC opinions); cf.
15 Kisor v. Wilkie, 588 U.S. 558, 579 (2019) (deference is “rarely” appropriate when an 16 agency’s current construction conflicts with a prior one).

17 3. Legislative history and purpose support the defense.

18 “[T]he statutory text is plain and unambiguous,” Gonzalez v. Herrera, __ 19 F.4th __, 2025 WL 2396495, at *4 (9th Cir. 2025) (cleaned up): Section 3345(a)(1) 20 applies only to an already-in-place first assistant. “But if the statute’s terms are

1 ambiguous,” the Court may consult “legislative history[] and the statute’s overall 2 purpose.” Id. (cleaned up). Both sources reinforce the defense’s interpretation.

3 “[T]he FVRA’s legislative history supports [the defense’s] reading.” Giraud, 4 2025 WL 2416737, at *17. The relevant Senate Report “clearly contemplates that 5 the first assistant provision only functions in its automatic form at the moment the 6 vacancy occurs, and does not repeat, and suggests that the President has no role in 7 that process.” Id. “The report emphasizes the value of the first assistant’s 8 experience and independence, severely undercutting the idea that the President can 9 hand pick a first assistant with the express purpose of installing them in the acting 10 role.” Id. As the report explains, “If there is no first assistant, no one is permitted 11 by law to become an acting officer until the President designates a [qualified] 12 individual to be the acting officer.” Id. (cleaned up).⁷

13 Congressional “purpose” likewise supports the defense’s reading. Giraud, 14 2025 WL 2416737, at *18. Prior to the FVRA, the administration argued it could 15 use its general delegation authority to “designat[e] . . . acting officials for an 16 indefinite period,” so Congress sought “to address the deficiencies in the operation of 17 the current Vacancies Act.” Id. The FVRA was introduced “to strengthen” the prior 18 Act and “was framed as a reclamation of the Congress’s Appointments Clause

⁷ See also S. Rep. No. 105-250 at 14 (explaining that if the Senate rejects a (minority view) (“Section 3345(a)(1) of the bill can be read to provide that . . . only the ‘first assistant’ to the particular Senate confirmed officer . . . can be an acting officer.”); 144 Cong. Rec. S11037 (daily ed. Sept. 28, 1998) (statement of Sen.

Lieberman) (“[A] first assistant apparently can take over only if he or she was the first assistant at the time of the vacancy.”).

1 power.” SW General, 796 F.3d at 70. Congress therefore “severely limited the 2 options for who may perform the functions and duties of a vacant PAS office.”
3 Giraud, 2025 WL 2416737, at *18.⁸ “A statutory interpretation that opens a gaping 4 loophole in this tightly crafted scheme meant to provide only limited flexibility and 5 prevent ‘manipulation’ flies in the face of the goal that Congress was trying to 6 accomplish.” Giraud, 2025 WL 2416737, at *18.

7 Text, history, and purpose all point to the same result: the administration 8 may not circumvent the statutory scheme by backfilling the first assistant role.

9 B. An interim U.S. Attorney cannot serve for more than 120 10 days, even if the individual switches to an acting role.

11 Moreover, even if Ms. Chattah might otherwise be a valid acting candidate 12 under the FVRA, she cannot continue to serve as a temporary U.S. Attorney 13 because her time has elapsed under 28 U.S.C. § 546. See Motion at 25–37. That 14 section allows “[a] person appointed as United States attorney under this section” 15 (like Ms. Chattah) to “serve” only “120 days after appointment.” 28 U.S.C.
16 §§ 546(c), (c)(2). That rule is more specific than the FVRA. Applying it here gives 17 effect to Section 546(d)’s judicial appointment mechanism and its 150-year pedigree.
18 And letting the administration avoid the 120-day cap would perpetuate the very 22 WL 4363344, at *7–*8 (Aug. 12, 2016) (explaining the catalyst for the FVRA was an 23 administration maneuver that in effect assigned an individual to a “first assistant” position “only after [the primary] PAS position became vacant”) (citing Steven J.

Duffield & James C. Ho, The Illegal Appointment of Bill Lann Lee, Note, 2 Tex. Rev.
L. & Pol. 335, 348–53 (1998)); id. at *37–*38 (similar).

1 “mischief” Congress sought to stop when it enacted the limit in 2007. Ms. Chattah 2 is thus unlawfully serving as U.S. Attorney.

3 The government does not respond to much of that analysis. See generally 4 Response at 10–12. It expressly concedes, for instance, that Ms. Chattah was first 5 “appointed . . . as United States Attorney pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 546.” Id. at 3. It 6 also does not dispute that Section 546(c)(2) is a more specific—and newer—statute 7 than the FVRA. See Response at 10–12. And it does not dispute that Congress 8 specifically designed Section 546(c)(2) to prevent lengthy service by non-confirmed 9 U.S. Attorneys like Ms. Chattah. See id.

10 Instead, the government claims that:

- 11 (1) it can switch back and forth between the FVRA and Section 546 12 because neither is the “‘exclusive’ means of filling [a] vacancy,” id. at 13 11;
- 14 (2) its reading does not render Section 546(d) superfluous because judicial 15 appointment has happened before, id. at 12 & n.3 (citing two 16 instances); and
- 17 (3) the “mischief” of lengthy non-confirmed U.S. Attorney service 18 addressed by Section 546(c)(2)’s 120-day time limit “has nothing to do 19 with the” government’s present attempt to skirt that time limit 20 through an FVRA maneuver, id. at 12 (cleaned up).

21 None of the government’s arguments is persuasive.

22 The government’s first argument (its switching-back-and-forth theory) 23 ignores the text of Section 546. That section caps the “serv[ice]” of any “person appointed as United States attorney under this section” to “120 days after appointment.” 28 U.S.C. §§ 546(c), (c)(2). So an administration might be able to choose at the outset whether to fill a vacancy using the FVRA or using Section 546.
See Hooks, 816 F.3d at 556. But once “[a] person” is “appointed” under Section 546,

1 that person can “serve” only until “the expiration of 120 days after appointment.” 2 28 U.S.C. §§ 546(c), (c)(2). The upshot: once the administration appoints an 3 individual under Section 546, the individual is stuck with the 120 days authorized 4 by that statute. See 28 U.S.C. § 546(c)(2).

5 Congress could have written the statute to embrace the government’s 6 switching-back-and-forth theory—but it did not. For instance, the statute could 7 have applied the 120-day cap to “The term of an appointment under this section”— 8 rather than to “serv[ice]” as “United States attorney” writ large. That different 9 phrasing would have permitted an appointee’s “serv[ice]” to run longer than 10 120 days if the President designated them under another provision like the FVRA.
11 Instead, Congress chose broad language that applies to any “serv[ice]” by a Section 12 546(a) appointee, regardless of an intervening designation under another statute.

13 The government’s second argument (concerning Section 546(d) judicial 14 appointments) actually cuts against its position here. Perhaps most obviously, that 15 previous administrations correctly allowed district courts to fill vacant positions 16 under Section 546(d) suggests that the instant maneuvers undercutting that role 17 are illegal. See Seila Law LLC v. Consumer Fin. Prot. Bureau, 591 U.S. 197, 220 18 (2020). And indeed, the government makes no effort whatsoever to explain how its 19 current theory leaves any room for Section 546(d). Cf. Response at 12. If the 20 administration can appoint someone for “119 days,” id. at 3, and then switch the 21 appointment to the FVRA (and then perhaps switch back when that runs out), then 22 Section 546(d)’s judicial appointment power “would lie dormant in all but the most 23

1 unlikely situations,” TRW, 534 U.S. at 31. Such a result forecloses the 2 government’s interpretation.

3 The government’s final claim (that Congress’s interest in limiting non-4 confirmed U.S. Attorney service “has nothing to do with” this case, Response at 12) 5 ignores the legislative record. As explained at length in the defense’s motion, 6 Congress enacted Section 546(c)(2)’s 120-day limit to prevent the Executive Branch 7 from avoiding the Senate confirmation process for U.S. Attorneys—a threat under 8 both the FVRA and Section 546. See Motion at 34–37 & nn.38–42. And indeed, 9 once both statutes were on the books, then-Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick 10 Leahy identified the interim-plus-acting maneuver as an “erroneous” interpretation 11 of the vacancy framework. 153 Cong. Rec. S15227-01 (daily ed. Dec. 12, 2007)
12 (Statement of Sen. Leahy). The government’s two-sentence treatment of the subject 13 does not address that history, never mind explain how that history could be 14 consistent with its maneuvers here. Cf. Response at 12. It instead offers just an 15 interpretation that would permit it to continue “clever evasions” of the 120-day 16 limit. Samuel L. Bray, The Mischief Rule, 109 Geo. L. J. 967, 1005–07 (2021). That 17 is fatal.

18 In short: nothing about the government’s three-page treatment of Section 19 546(c)’s 120-day limit is persuasive. Because Ms. Chattah was “appointed as 20 United States attorney” under Section 546, she cannot “serve” as U.S. Attorney in 21 any capacity, even under the FVRA, for more than “120 days after appointment.”
22 28 U.S.C. §§ 546(c), (c)(2). That she has purported to do so renders her continued 23 service illegal.

1 C. The FVRA precludes the administration from assigning a 2 de facto acting officer through a general delegation.

3 The government proposes a workaround to the FVRA problem: assuming 4 Ms. Chattah is barred from service under Section 3345(a)(1) or timed out under 5 Section 546(c)(2) as a technical matter, she can nevertheless perform the same role 6 as a practical matter. According to the government, the Attorney General can 7 perform “[a]ll the functions of the United States Attorney.” Response at 13. The 8 Attorney General can also delegate her duties. Thus, the Attorney General can 9 reclaim the U.S. Attorney’s functions; hire Ms. Chattah as a Special Attorney in 10 Main Justice;⁹ and delegate the reclaimed functions of the U.S. Attorney to 11 Ms. Chattah. Response at 13–16. If that is correct, the administration could 12 replace every sitting U.S. Attorney with an individual exercising delegated powers, 13 and those individuals could serve as de facto U.S. Attorneys in perpetuity, without 14 the Senate ever weighing in on the selections.

15 Giraud rejects this argument. “[T]he Government intends for its delegation 16 to confer upon Ms. [Chattah] the full panoply of powers of a PAS United States 17 Attorney.” 2025 WL 2416737, at *20. “This level of delegation is consistent with 18 the full suite of a United States Attorney’s statutory duties.” Id. But the FVRA 19 prohibits the administration from relying on its general delegation authority to 20 achieve this result. As Section 3347(a)(1) explains, the FVRA is the exclusive

21
22 ⁹ There’s no authority for the Attorney General to appoint a Special Attorney 23 who exercises the full suite of U.S. Attorney powers. Rather, the statutory scheme allows the administration to appoint special attorneys only “to assist United States Attorneys.” United States v. Trump, 740 F. Supp. 3d 1245, 1270 (S.D. Fla. 2024).

1 means of having someone perform on an acting basis, unless a separate statutory 2 provision (like 28 U.S.C. § 546) sets out an alternate procedure. As Section 3347(b) 3 specifies, “Any statutory provision providing general authority to the head of an 4 Executive agency . . . to delegate duties . . . is not a statutory provision to which 5 subsection (a)(1) applies.” “In other words, general vesting and delegation statutes 6 may not be used to temporarily authorize an acting official to perform the functions 7 and duties of any PAS office.” Giraud, 2025 WL 2416737, at *21 (cleaned up). “The 8 Government’s ‘Special Attorney’ theory crashes headlong into this unambiguous 9 barring provision.” Giraud, 2025 WL 2416737, at *22. Using a general delegation 10 to designate a de facto acting officer “is exactly what section 3347(b) prohibits.” Id.

11 The government’s theory likewise ignores the “legislative history.” Giraud, 12 2025 WL 2416737, at *22. “The FVRA’s exclusivity provision was enacted for the 13 express purpose of precluding the exact argument that the Government presses 14 here.” Id. “For years, the Department of Justice had argued that the Vacancies Act 15 did not apply to it and that vacancies within DOJ were to be temporarily filled 16 through delegation of the Attorney General’s authority pursuant to sections 509 and 17 510.” Id. (citing, inter alia, S. Rep. 105-250 at 17) (“[Section 3347(b)] forecloses the 18 argument raised by the Justice Department.”). “Congress expressly rejected that 19 interpretation, and manifested that rejection in section 3347(b).” Id. The 20 Department of Justice impermissibly seeks to reinvoke that prohibited form of 21 authority here. For the fourth time, the government fails to address Giraud.

22 The government attempts to support this prohibited theory, but its argument 23 relies on a simple mistake about the statutory scheme. Response at 14–16. As

1 background, and as the motion explains (at 46), Section 3348(d) imposes a 2 ratification bar; if someone is unlawfully serving as acting officer, a subsequent, 3 properly serving officer cannot ratify their actions. Section 3348(a) limits the 4 ratification bar by specifying it applies only to a “function or duty” of the office that 5 is non-delegable. See Gonzales & Gonzales Bonds & Ins. Agency, Inc. v. U.S. Dep’t 6 of Homeland Sec., 107 F.4th 1064, 1073 (9th Cir. 2024);¹⁰ see also Kajmowicz v.
7 Whitaker, 42 F.4th 138, 148 (3d Cir. 2022). But Section 3348(a) narrowly defines 8 the term “function or duty” only “[i]n this section,” not other sections.

9 Other parts of the FVRA use the same “function or duty” phrase. For 10 example, Section 3347 (the general delegation bar) forbids the administration from 11 using its general delegation authority to assign someone to perform the vacant 12 office’s “functions and duties.” The government concludes, based on Section 13 3348(a)’s definition, that the Attorney General may “delegat[e] to Ms. Chattah the 14 nonexclusive functions associated with being a United States Attorney.” Response 15 at 14. But Section 3348(a)’s narrow definition is explicitly limited only to Section 16 3348, so for the rest of the FVRA, the phrase “functions and duties” retains its 17 “broader sense of all functions or duties of the vacant office.” Giraud, 2025 WL 18 2416737, at *24. Because Gonzales and Kajmowicz are about Section 3348, not 19 Section 3347, they are “in no way to the contrary.” Id. at *25. Although Arthrex, 20 Inc. v. Smith & Nephew, Inc., 35 F.4th 1328 (Fed. Cir. 2022), credits the 21 government’s argument, it makes the same interpretive mistake. “Thus, Arthrex is

22
23 ¹⁰ The defense maintains Gonzales was wrongly decided, as explained in Judge Christen’s dissent, and preserves the argument for further review.

1 not persuasive.” Giraud, 2025 WL 2416737, at *25. For the fifth time, the 2 government fails to address Giraud.

3 As the FVRA explains, the administration cannot use general delegation 4 authority as an end-run around the statute. The government’s theory thus fails.¹¹

5 D. The government’s reading violates the Appointments 6 Clause.

7 Finally, even if the administration’s position complied with the relevant 8 statutes (as discussed above, it does not), then its reading would violate the 9 Appointments Clause. See Motion at 38–43. Especially following the Supreme 10 Court’s Arthrex decision, U.S. Attorneys are principal officers requiring Senate 11 confirmation. And the same is true of interim or acting U.S. Attorneys—at least if 12 the government’s instant statutory arguments are blessed. That means that, even 13 if the statutes do not foreclose the government’s position, the Constitution does.
14 The defense’s statutory reading avoids these constitutional issues. At a minimum, 15 then, the Appointments Clause problems with the government’s arguments further 16 support the defense’s reading of the FVRA and Section 546.

17 In response, the government principally claims that Arthrex’s analysis does 18 not make U.S. Attorneys principal officers. Response at 17–18.¹² That is so, the 19 20 ¹¹ If the government’s general delegation theory is correct, the position of U.S.

21 Attorney nevertheless remains vacant, so the judges of this district have authority under Section 546(d) to appoint an interim U.S. Attorney.

22 ¹² Although the government suggests in passing that Arthrex somehow did 23 not overrule Gantt, see Response at 17, it never explains how that could be so, see
id. As the defense has explained at length, Arthrex’s mode of analysis “is ‘clearly

1 government says, because U.S. Attorneys “are supervised and can be reversed by 2 the Attorney General and the Deputy Attorney General.” Id. at 17.

3 But as the defense has explained (and in ways the government has not 4 responded to), supervision is not dispositive. See Motion at 40–41. “[T]he buck 5 stops with the” U.S. Attorney “[i]n all the ways that matter to the parties who 6 appear before [the government].” United States v. Arthrex, 594 U.S. 1, 17 (2021).

7 So any “supervision functions still fall short of the kind that would render the [U.S.
8 Attorney] [an] inferior officer[.]” Intercollegiate Broad Sys., Inc. v. Copyright 9 Royalty Bd., 684 F.3d 1332, 1339 (D.C. Cir. 2012). On its face, then, Arthrex 10 supports the defense, not the government.

11 Beyond its erroneous Arthrex claim, the government also misreads dicta from 12 Myers v. United States—a case about the president’s ability to remove a postmaster.
13 See Response at 18 (citing 272 U.S. 52, 159 (1926)). Per the government, that case’s 14 one-sentence suggestion that the removal power extends “to a United States 15 attorney, an inferior officer” somehow prevents U.S. Attorneys from requiring 16 Senate confirmation under the Appointments Clause. Id.

17 Not so. For one, Myers did not involve a U.S. Attorney. See 272 U.S. at 107 18 (involving a “first-class postmaster”). So Myers’s conclusory one-sentence reference 19 to that office is dicta. In re Grand Jury Investigation, 315 F. Supp. 3d 602, 642 20 21

23 irreconcilable’ with” Gantt, such that this Court is bound by Arthrex and should “reject [Gantt] as having been effectively overruled.” Motion at 41 (quoting *Miller
v. Gammie*, 335 F.3d 889, 900 (9th Cir. 2003) (en banc)).

1 (D.D.C. 2018) (identifying that the U.S. Attorney statement in Myers was “dicta”).¹³
2 And, perhaps even more significantly, Myers was resolving a different question 3 (removal) than the one facing this Court (appointment). See id. That means that 4 Myers is not precedential—“or even instructive”—on the issues before this Court.
5 CPC Patent Techs. Pty Ltd. v. Apple, Inc., 34 F.4th 801, 809 (9th Cir. 2022); see also 6 Sakamoto v. Duty Free Shoppers, Ltd., 764 F.2d 1285, 1288 (9th Cir. 1985)
7 (“[U]nstated assumptions on non-litigated issues are not precedential holdings 8 binding future decisions.”). Moreover, the Myers dicta is of limited value even on its 9 own terms. See id. The case merely identifies that U.S. Attorneys can be removed 10 by the president without Senate approval—something true of most officers, both 11 principal and inferior. 272 U.S. at 159. But that does nothing to resolve whether 12 their appointment must comply with the Appointments Clause. See id.

13 The government finally insists that even if a permanent U.S. Attorney is a 14 principal officer, then under United States v. Eaton, 169 U.S. 331, 343 (1898), a 15 temporary U.S. Attorney like Ms. Chattah is an inferior officer. Response at 17.
16 But that doctrine presumes the “temporary” officer is serving “for a limited time, 17

19 ¹³ As various courts have observed, Myers contains “abundant dicta.” Wilcox 20 v. Trump, 775 F. Supp. 3d 215, 232 (D.D.C. 2025). It is thus ordinarily treated as 21 resolving only the postmaster removal question. E.g., id. at 233; Morrison v. Olson, 22 487 U.S. 654, 687 & n.24 (1988) (rejecting analogous reasoning in Myers to that 23 invoked by the government here as “dicta”; “We recognized that the only issue actually decided in Myers was that ‘the President had power to remove a postmaster of the first class, without the advice and consent of the Senate as required by act of Congress.’”) (quoting Humphrey’s Executor v. United States, 295 U.S. 602, 626 (1935)); Kalaris v. Donovan, 697 F.2d 376, 389 n.54 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (identifying that “Myers’ broadest dicta expressed the view that the President’s removal powers extended to all government employees who were not judges on Article III courts”).

1 and under special and temporary conditions.” Motion at 42 (quoting Eaton, 169 2 U.S. at 344). And the government’s theories, if accepted by this Court, would 3 permit Ms. Chattah to exercise the U.S. Attorney’s full authority and to do so 4 potentially indefinitely. The government never explains how that service would be 5 limited, special, and temporary such that Eaton would render her an inferior officer.
6 Absent such a limiting principle, the Appointments Clause problem persists.

7 II. The Court should dismiss the indictment; the judges of the 8 district may select an interim U.S. Attorney.

9 The appropriate remedy is to dismiss the indictment with prejudice. If the 10 Court declines to dismiss (with or without prejudice), it should enter a 11 disqualification order. Because the office is vacant, the judges of this district have 12 authority to appoint an interim U.S. Attorney.

13 A. The Court should dismiss the indictment or enter a 14 disqualification order.

15 The Court should dismiss the indictment with prejudice. Motion at 43–47.
16 Dismissal is appropriate under United States v. Bundy, 968 F.3d 1019 (9th Cir.
17 2020), United States v. Trump, 740 F. Supp. 3d 1245 (S.D. Fla. 2024), and the 18 ratification bar, 5 U.S.C. § 3348(d)(2), among other precedents. The government 19 spends no time addressing these authorities. Instead, it presents a series of 20 irrelevant arguments.

21 First, the government claims dismissal is prohibited under United States v.
22 Gantt, 194 F.3d 987 (9th Cir. 1999). Response at 18–19. That case involved an 23 invalidly certified suppression appeal; its discussion regarding indictments is dicta;

1 and it does not address the principles discussed in Bundy, Trump, or the ratification 2 bar. Motion at 45 n.45.

3 The government’s other citations are unavailing. Response at 19–20. For 4 example, United States v. Hilario, 218 F.3d 19 (1st Cir. 2000), concluded “an 5 infirmity in the appointment of the United States Attorney” would not “invalidate 6 [a] notice of appeal.” Id. at 22. That holding is irrelevant to indictments. “[T]he 7 Solicitor General” decides whether to appeal, not “the local United States Attorney,” 8 id.; by contrast, the U.S. Attorney decides whether to authorize prosecution.¹⁴

9 Second, perhaps intending to address Bundy, the government insists “there is 10 no Due Process right to choose one’s prosecutor.” Response at 20. But as with the 11 right to an impartial judge or a properly constituted jury, id., the Due Process 12 Clause should require the prosecution to be impartial and properly appointed. See 13 18 U.S.C. § 208(a) (criminalizing certain conflicts of interest); Young v. United 14 States ex rel. Vuitton et Fils S.A., 481 U.S. 787, 807, 809 n.21 (1987) (imposing as a 15 matter of “supervisory authority” a “requirement of a disinterested prosecutor,” and 16 reserving the constitutional issue); cf. Erikson v. Pawnee Cnty. Bd. Of Cnty. Com’rs, 17 263 F.3d 1151, 1154 (10th Cir. 2001) (“[T]he participation of a privately-retained 18

20 ¹⁴ In United States v. Suescun, 237 F.3d 1284, 1287–88 (11th Cir. 2001), the 21 court concluded the defendant forfeited a challenge to the interim U.S. Attorney; 22 that conclusion has no bearing here. Neither United States v. Ruiz Rijo, 87 F. Supp.
23 2d 69 (D.P.R. 2000), United States v. Baldwin, 541 F. Supp. 2d 1184 (D.N.M. 2008), nor United States v. Young, 541 F. Supp. 1226 (D.N.M. 2008), resolved arguments based on the principles discussed in Bundy, Trump, or the ratification bar.
Separately, Baldwin and Young involved indictments brought under an interim U.S. Attorney who the defense conceded was properly appointed; the challenge involved a new interim U.S. Attorney appointed mid-prosecution.

1 attorney in a state criminal prosecution does not violate the defendant’s right to due 2 process under federal law unless the private attorney effectively controlled critical 3 prosecution decisions . . . includ[ing] whether to prosecute.”) (cleaned up). Even if 4 no due process violation exists, the Court should still exercise its inherent authority 5 to “protect[] the integrity of the federal courts.” Bundy, 968 F.3d at 1031. The 6 government’s position poses a risk not just to the integrity of this prosecution, but 7 also to the Senate’s constitutional advise-and-consent function and the judiciary’s 8 authority—dating back to the Civil War era—to select an interim U.S. Attorney.

9 Third, the government maintains the indictment is valid under Criminal 10 Rule 7 because a validly serving Assistant U.S. Attorney signed it. Response at 21.
11 But that attorney presumably obtained and signed the indictment under 12 Ms. Chattah’s authority and supervision. As the motion explains (at 47–48), the 13 Court should disqualify any attorneys acting under Ms. Chattah’s supervision (as 14 opposed to the Attorney General’s supervision). If an Assistant U.S. Attorney 15 signed an indictment under Ms. Chattah’s supervision, the signature is invalid 16 under Criminal Rule 7. Even if the signature complied with the criminal rules, that 17 does not end the inquiry; rather, the motion seeks relief under authorities much 18 broader than the criminal rules, including Bundy, Trump, and the ratification bar.

19 According to the government, Ms. Chattah “did not even review or approve 20 the indictment[] in the first place,” and it offers to submit relevant documents 21 establishing that proposition in camera. Response at 21 & n.4. Any documents 22 bearing on this litigation should be filed on the public docket (or under seal) to allow 23 the defense an opportunity to respond. In any event, as the motion explains, the 1 statutory and regulatory schemes require the U.S. Attorney to authorize a 2 prosecution. The government does not dispute that proposition. If the U.S.

3 Attorney’s Office in this district does not follow that practice, that is a problem for 4 other cases—not a way to avoid dismissal in the instant case. Regardless, the 5 attorneys who approved the prosecution were still apparently acting under 6 Ms. Chattah’s authority and supervision, so their actions were likewise voidable.

7 Fourth, the government disputes the defendant’s Article III standing to seek 8 a remedy. Response at 21–22. The argument is puzzling. The government relies 9 on a series of civil cases, but this is a criminal case; the defense is objecting to the 10 indictment and the qualifications of the head prosecutor in the district. A criminal 11 defendant undoubtedly has standing to challenge the charging document and 12 prosecutorial authority. When a defendant’s liberty is in jeopardy, it is unclear 13 what more harm could be required to confer standing.

14 Fifth, the government opposes disqualifying attorneys acting under 15 Ms. Chattah’s direction. Response at 19–20. The government claims the Assistant 16 U.S. Attorneys can continue working “subject to supervision by both Ms. Chattah 17 and Senate-confirmed officials in Main Justice.” Id. at 19. The attorneys can 18 continue working subject to supervision by Senate-confirmed Main Justice officers, 19 but not Ms. Chattah. See Giraud, 2025 WL 2416737, at *30; see also United States 20 v. Giraud, No. 1:24-cr-768, 2025 WL 2196794, at *9–11 (D.N.J. Aug. 1, 2025). For 21 the sixth time, the government fails to address Giraud.

22 The government suggests federal courts should hesitate before disqualifying 23 an entire U.S. Attorney’s Office. Response at 19–20. It primarily relies on United

1 States v. Williams, 68 F.4th 564 (9th Cir. 2023). That case involved the question
2 whether one Assistant U.S. Attorney’s alleged misconduct should be imputed 3 horizontally to the entire office—not the vertical consequence of an acting U.S.
4 Attorney who was ineligible to serve. In any event, the defense is not seeking to 5 disqualify the entire U.S. Attorney’s office; rather, the defense seeks to disqualify 6 Ms. Chattah and any attorneys who are operating in whole or in part under her 7 authority, supervision, and direction. If Main Justice supervises the Assistant U.S.
8 Attorneys, they need not be disqualified. That “stops well short of officewide 9 disqualification.” Giraud, 2025 WL 2196794, at *10. For the seventh time, the 10 government fails to address Giraud.

11 The government’s remedial arguments are no more successful than its merits 12 arguments. The Court should reject them.

13 B. The judges of this district may select an interim U.S.
14 Attorney.

15 Ms. Chattah’s appointment occurred on March 27, 2025. See Response 16 Exhibit 1. Her interim service therefore expired on July 25. Because her term has 17 expired and the office remains vacant, the judges of the district may select a new 18 interim U.S. Attorney under Section 546(d).

19 The government suggests Ms. Chattah’s service was not set to expire until 20 July 30, 2025—120 days from April 1, when she began serving as interim U.S.
21 Attorney. Because she resigned on July 28, the government concludes, her service 22 never expired. Response at 22. But the appointment itself occurred on March 27 23 (although, admittedly, it was not effective until April 1), so March 27 is the 1 operative date. In any event, Section 546(d) applies when, as here, an interim U.S.

2 Attorney’s resignation on day 119 is not a bona fide resignation. Motion at 48–49; 3 see also id. at 20–22; Response Exhibit 2 (“I hereby resign my position as Interim
4 United States Attorney I look forward to continuing to lead the U.S. Attorney’s 5 Office.”). The government does not respond to this argument.

6 The government maintains the defense lacks “standing to compel the district 7 court to make such an appointment” because Section 546(d) is discretionary.
8 Response at 22. The defense is not seeking to compel such an appointment. But the 9 authority exists, and the judges of this district should consider exercising it.

10 CONCLUSION

11 The Court should dismiss the indictment with prejudice; dismiss the 12 indictment without prejudice; or disqualify Ms. Chattah and any attorneys acting 13 under her direction.

14 Dated: September 17, 2025.
